5 THINGS TO KNOW

WELCOME TO METRO BOSTON

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT, REPORTER

For Bostonians, the Freedom Trail is something dominated by tourists. I've certainly had to sidestep groups of out-of-towners and dodge guides dressed up in Revolutionary-era garb as they crowded outside Boston's many historic sites. But a new exhibit at the Old State House hopes to reach locals and visitors alike by reframing the history of the American Revolution to think about the voices and people often left out. Yes, John Hancock walked these streets during that era, but so did many others. Read more about how the exhibit explores this through a literal entryway: the door of the original Hancock House inside and at metroboston.us.

REPUBLICANS SEEK FIX TO FAMILY SEPARATION CRISIS

1 Congressional Republicans scrambled on Tuesday to craft legislation that would quell an outcry over the Trump administration's separation of immigrant parents and children at the U.S.-Mexico border with an opinion poll showing most Americans oppose the policy. The family separations and detentions of children, highlighted by videos of youngsters in cages and an audiotape of wailing children, have sparked anger at home from groups ranging from clergy to influential business leaders as well as condemnation abroad. President Donald Trump arrived at Capitol Hill for a Tuesday evening meeting with House of Representative Republicans to discuss their immigration legislation. He is focused on winning congressional funding for a wall he has long wanted to build along America's southern border with Mexico, a plan resisted by Democrats. Trump, who has made a tough stance on immigration a centerpiece of his presidency, has staunchly defended his administration's actions. He has cast blame for the family separations on Democrats, although his fellow Republicans control both chambers in Congress.

'ZERO TOLERANCE' START-ED BY TRUMP: LAWMAKERS

2 Republican Sen. Lindsey Graham on Tuesday said the "zero-tolerance" policy, which apprehends those entering the U.S. illegally and separates families, was implemented by President Trump. Democratic Sen. Dick Durbin said, "the president created this problem." "The 'zero-tolerance' policy is of their making, the problem has been long-standing." Ten thousand of the twelve thousand are unaccompanied minors, according to Graham. "The policy we're talking about was implemented by this administration and they could change it if they wanted to." Durbin, who said the president can take care of this problem with one phone call, was likely referring to a phone call to DHS, which other lawmakers also claim. Trump, facing a blast of criticism for the detention of children separated from their immigrant parents at the U.S.-Mexico border, was slated to meet with Republican lawmakers on Tuesday ahead of votes on immigration. legislation.

US WITHDRAWS FROM UNITED NATIONS HUMAN RIGHTS BODY

3 The United States withdrew from the United Nations Human Rights Council on Tuesday accusing it of a "chronic bias against Israel," a move that activists warned would make advancing human rights globally even more difficult.

Standing with U.S. Secretary of State Mike Pompeo, Ambassador Nikki Haley slammed Russia, China, Cuba and Egypt for thwarting U.S. efforts to reform the council. While encouraging Washington to remain, Haley criticized countries which shared U.S. values but "were unwilling to seriously challenge the status quo."

The United States is halfway through a three-year term on the main U.N. human rights body and the Trump administration had long threatened to quit if the 47-member Geneva-based entity was not overhauled.

"Look at the council membership, and you see an appalling disrespect for the most basic rights," said Haley, citing Venezuela, China, Cuba and Democratic Republic of Congo.

Haley also said the "disproportionate focus and unending hostility toward Israel is clear proof that the council is motivated by political bias not by human rights."

Washington's withdrawal is the latest U.S. rejection of multilateral engagement after it pulled out of the Paris climate agreement and the 2015 Iran nuclear deal.

It also comes as the United States faces intense criticism for detaining children separated from their immigrant parents at the U.S.-Mexico border. U.N. High Commissioner for Human Rights Zeid Ra'ad al-Hussein on Monday called on Washington to halt its "unconscionable" policy.

Human rights groups have criticized the Trump administration for not making human rights a priority in its foreign policy. Critics say this sends a message that the administration turns a blind eye to human rights abuses in some parts of the world.

Diplomats have said the U.S. withdrawal from the body could bolster countries such as Cuba, Russia, Egypt and Pakistan, all of which resist what they see as U.N. interference in sovereign issues.

DEPUTY CHIEF OF STAFF RESIGNING: WHITE HOUSE

4 White House deputy chief of staff Joe Hagin, who led the U.S. advance team for President Donald Trump's summit with North Korean leader Kim Jong Un in Singapore, is resigning, according to White House officials. He plans to return to the private sector after entertaining jobs in other government agencies after stepping down on July 6, said officials. "Joe Hagin has been a huge asset to my administration. He planned and executed the longest and one of the most historic foreign trips ever made by a president, and he did it all perfectly," Trump said in a statement. "We will miss him in the office and even more on the road." Hagin, 62, is a veteran of Republican presidencies, having had roles in the administrations of Ronald Reagan, George H.W. Bush and George W. Bush. One of the most experienced advisers at the Trump White House, Hagin negotiated details with North Korean counterparts for the summit last week on Singapore's Sentosa Island in which Trump and Kim met face-to-face for the first time.

MEXICO CALLS CHILDREN SEPARATION 'INHUMANE'

5 Mexico's foreign minister Luis Videgaray on Tuesday called the separation of children from immigrant parents at the U.S.-Mexico border "cruel and inhumane" and urged the U.S. to reconsider the practice. Images published this week of children and youths sitting in concrete-floored cages in U.S. shelter facilities have stirred outrage. U.S. officials have defended the measures as a way to secure the border and deter illegal entry. "This is a clear violation of human rights and puts children, including those with disabilities, in a vulnerable situation," Videgaray told a news conference in Mexico City. Videgaray said the Mexican government had made its position clear to President Donald Trump's administration and raised the issue with senior U.N. officials, including U.N. Secretary-General Antonio Guterres. Of some 1,995 cases registered by U.S. authorities, only around one percent of the children affected were Mexican, and most had already been repatriated, Videgaray said. Among the 21 identified cases of Mexicans separated from their parents was a 10 year-old girl with Down Syndrome who was being held in McAllen, Texas.

New exhibit opens the door to untold stories of American history

What does it mean to be an American? Who were the Founding Fathers referring to with the "We" of We the People? And who is left out of the story we tell about the American Revolution?

These are big questions, but a new exhibit opening Wednesday at the Old State House in Boston will challenge visitors to tackle them head on.

"Through the Keyhole" wants people think about the voices often left out of America's history, and how that changes our perceptions of what is "American" today.

"People have a sense of who the core characters are, but that's a distorted understanding of what the American Revolution was all about," said Nat Sheidley, executive director of The Bostonian Society, which operates the Old State House. "It was much more a social movement, a popular movement, than people realized."

One of those core characters was John Hancock, most remembered for his bold signature on the Declaration of Independence. But Hancock was also a social figure who's Beacon Hill home was "known to people throughout Boston," Sheidley said.

"I think Hancock saw one of his roles during the Revolutionary period as being sort of a patron for the town and as having the role of bringing people together," he added. The Hancock House served as that connecting space.

At the crux of the exhibit is the Hancock House's door. Though the building was torn down in 1863, the door has been preserved, and it's a portal to historical figures besides Hancock himself.

The Hancock House was a central figure in American history for many, aside from just John Hancock himself. "What we're trying to explore in this exhibition is how we might use historic artifacts to dig a little deeper, to see how the lives of the most visible and powerful founders were bound up with the lives of many others who helped to push the colonies toward independence," Sheidley said.

A play within the exhibit, "Cato & Dolly," will explore the lives of two figures who stepped through that same door — Cato, a slave who lived at the Hancock House, and Dolly, John Hancock's wife who was also the first lady of Massachusetts. The play will give visitors a glimpse of everyday life behind the Hancock door through the eyes of those who lived there.

"We love the symbol of the door, It's a great metaphor and hard to avoid — it's a gateway for understanding but doors are also barriers," Sheidley said. He hopes this symbol makes visitors think about which doors in America remain closed to certain people today.

The door to this exhibit, at least, is open to everyone, Sheidley said, including local Bostonians who may usually avoid the Freedom Trail and its groups of tourists, as well as those who don't usually see themselves reflected in the story of the American Revolution.

"The work we're doing [is] to try to broaden the picture of who took part in the Revolution, and we hope it makes the story feel relevant to a broader cross-section of our audience," he said. "What happened here belongs to us all. It doesn't just belong to people who look like John Hancock, and we feel we're making that accessible."

"Through the Keyhole" is open seven days a week from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., June 20 to Dec. 28 at the Old State House, 206 Washington Street, Boston, MA, 02109. For more information, visit bostonhistory.org/keyhole.

Boston taps law firm to sue pharma companies over opioid epidemic

The city of Boston has retained a law firm to sue pharmaceutical companies to recover damages from the opioid epidemic, Mayor Marty Walsh announced on Tuesday.

Boston has tapped Motley Rice LLC for the litigation against opioid manufacturers, distributors and dispensaries.

Walsh announced that he was considering suing pharmaceutical companies for their role in the deadly opioid epidemic in January and issued a Request for Information to hear from law firms, researchers and others who could help inform the city's approach.

Motley Rice will now begin to gather information from the city and talk to officials to inform the legal strategy. The law firm expects to file the lawsuit in the fall.

"Boston, like so many cities across the country, has invested significant time, money and resources to aggressively attack the opioid crisis from every angle."

Mayor Marty Walsh

"Boston, like so many cities across the country, has invested significant time, money and resources to aggressively attack the opioid crisis from every angle," Walsh said in a statement. "Now is the time to finally hold the pharmaceutical industry responsible. Through this effort, my priority continues to be the financial and social damages to cities caused by the reckless dissemination of opioids and ensuring that Boston, a city on the front lines of this fight every day, is best positioned to recover and meet these ongoing costs."

In 2017, there were 1,510 confirmed opioid-related deaths across Massachusetts, according to the state health department.

Boston is taking steps to sue pharmaceutical companies for their role in the opioid epidemic. WIKIMEDIA COMMONS

In 2017, there were 1,510 confirmed opioid-related deaths across Massachusetts, according to the state health department, with the largest concentration, 266 deaths, having occurred in Boston.

Massachusetts Attorney General Maura Healey recently announced a lawsuit against Purdue Pharma and its executives for their role in fueling opioid-related deaths. While this was the first such lawsuit to name executives, municipalities across the country have been filing similar litigation.

Motley Rice currently represents the city of Chicago and Santa Clara County in their complaints against pharmaceutical companies, as well as seven states in investigations and litigation against opioid manufacturers and distributors.

HEALTH GUIDE

How to know if you are eligible for Medicare

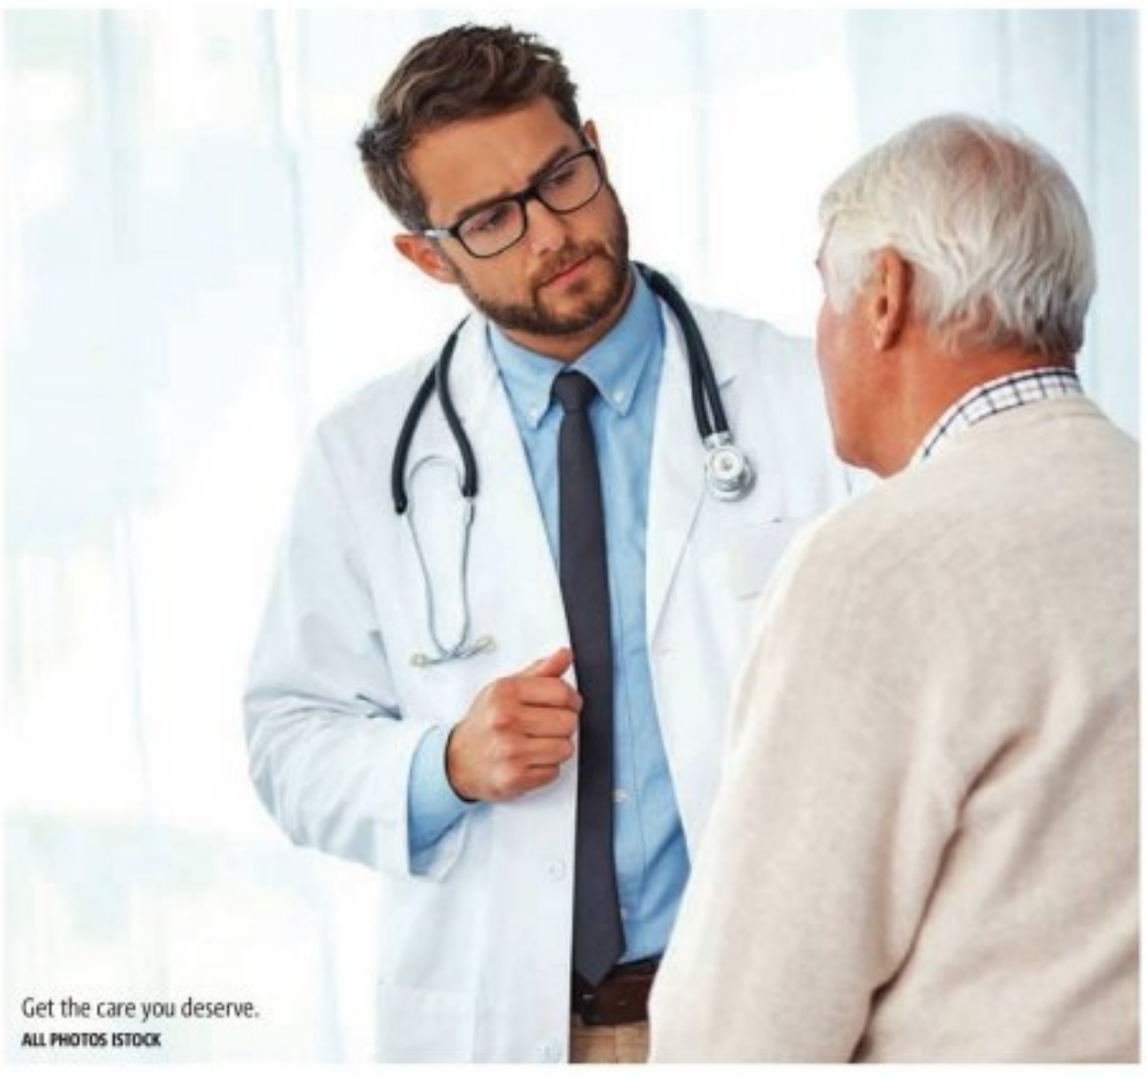
You might be able to get more help than you originally thought

PAT KING
patrick.king@metro.us

Healthcare in the U.S. can either be a conversation starter or an immediate conversation ender depending on who you are talking to. There are so many different options both, private and public, that are available. But, finding the care that makes the most sense for you and your financial situation is important to make sure that you are not buried in costly medical bills. That's why government funded programs like Medicare are so important to help alleviate this kind of financial burden on everyday Americans. But do you know what Medicare really is, more less, and how to get it?

What is Medicare?

Medicare is a federally funded health insurance program that is intended for people who have retired from work and are no longer on their company's insurance. To sum it up, these benefits are intended to help you stay healthy if you are primarily based out of your home. These benefits will kick in automatically for you if you are receiving social security payments once you have retired and are at least 65. Once it kicks in, you will receive a few different options of insurance that will be available for you.



Get the care you deserve.
ALL PHOTOS ISTOCK

First, there is Medicare A for basic hospital needs. This will cover inpatient hospital stays, care in a professional nursing facility, hospice care as well as home health care assistance. Medicare B will cover specific services like outpatient care, the costs of medical supplies, and basic preventive care. Medicare C includes all of the benefits included in A and B but is usually paired with a private insurance that contracts through Medicare to offer you more personalized choices with privately owned facilities without having to pay out of pocket for their services. Finally, Medicare D adds prescription drug coverage to both the original Medicare programs.

Are you eligible for Medicare?

Most people understand that you need to be 65 or older to be eligible for Medicare, but there are some other factors that could help you gain coverage on this insurance if you are younger. For instance, if you are under the age of 65 and have a disability that makes it difficult to leave your home and, as a result, you have been on disability insurance for two years, you can also qualify to receive Medicare benefits if you have been diagnosed with an end-stage renal disease and need constant dialysis.

So, if you find that you are eligible for Medicare, make sure you apply and receive the care you deserve. If you are a senior and would like to receive some of the best assistance through these benefits, make sure to check out the services provided by Boston's own Commonwealth Care Alliance. To receive more information, call them today at 888-537-5816 or visit them at commonwealthcarealliance.org.

Protecting children from window falls

BOSTON PUBLIC HEALTH COMMISSION

DR. JENNIFER LO

Window guards are a must for parents with small children. ISTOCK

With summer upon us, many are finally cracking our windows open to let in the fresh air. Window screens keep the bugs out, but with toddlers who love to crawl, climb and explore, it's important that we take an additional step to protect our little ones, adding window guards. Window guards, unlike window screens, are secured and weight-bearing, so that if your child makes their way up to the window, they will be safely secured inside.

Every year, about eight children under the age of five die from falling out of a window, and more than 3,300 are injured seriously enough to go to the hospital, according to a report by Safe Kids Worldwide.

Keeping your home safe and healthy is, of course, a priority for parents with young children, and at the Boston Public Health Commission (BPHC), we're here to help make that easier. If you're a renter, ask your landlord to install window guards. Low-cost window guards are available for Boston residents at Boston Building Resources located on 100 Terrace Street or by phone at (617) 442-2262.

Tips to protect your children from window falls

Lock all unopened windows and doors. Keep furniture or anything a child can climb upon away from windows. Open windows from the top, not the bottom. If bottom-opening windows are to be used for ventilation and not egress, install locks to prevent opening more than four inches Be sure children are always supervised near open windows. Install child safety window guards. Fixed guards should not be used because they may prevent exit in case of fire. Do not allow playing or use of fire escapes by children. All balconies should have less than 4 inches between bars.

BPHC
PREVENT CHILD WINDOW FALLS
Children 7 years old and younger have the highest risk for window falls.
Window guards are recommended for windows above the 2nd floor.
Window guards are recommended for the 1st floor if the window is 12 feet above ground.
Window guards are the best way to prevent window falls

For assistance in asking your landlord to install window guards, contact the Boston Public Health Commission by phone at (617) 534-5197 or by email at injuryprevention@bphc.org.

Dana-Farber Wants You to Be Sun Safe!

Dana-Farber Cancer Institute's sun safety/skin cancer prevention program is visiting local beaches this summer.

Summer is right around the corner. Take steps to stay safe during the warm weather with Dana-Farber's Sun Safety/Skin Cancer Prevention Program.

The Sun Safety program works to reduce the incidence of skin cancer in Massachusetts by offering free prevention education and free skin cancer screenings to the public in the Blum Family Resource Center Van.

The program uses the mobile Van to bring these free resources to various communities around Boston.

This initiative especially targets populations in Massachusetts with a high prevalence and/or incidence of skin cancer, including beachgoers.

The mobile Van is a 39-foot custom-designed vehicle that has a 15-seat classroom and a fully equipped exam room for free skin cancer screenings. All screenings are performed by a board-certified Brigham and Women's Hospital dermatologist on board the van.

"The majority of melanomas can be attributed to exposure to the sun's ultraviolet (UV) radiation. Therefore, it is important that people learn the potentially life-saving prevention and detection strategies that are taught in the mobile Van," said Blum Van's medical director, Margaret W. Cavanaugh-Hussey, MD, MPH.

The importance of early breast cancer detection

Do you know the signs?

PAT KING
patrick.king@metro.us

Breast cancer is the top diagnosed cancer and the second leading cause of death amongst women. According to the National Breast Cancer Foundation, over 250,000 women in the United States will be diagnosed with breast cancer and more than 40,500 will die from it. This is not solely an issue for women either, as the Foundation has also found that close to 2,500 men will be diagnosed with nearly 460 of them succumbing to this disease each year. Early detection is key when it comes to breast cancer, and it is important that you check yourself regularly and understand the early signs before it too late.

What to look for

There are a few tell tale signs that you can spot yourself that will let you know when you should be checked by a medical professional. The first is any change in size or augmentation of your breasts. You know, just anything that you might find that seems peculiar to you. On a more obvious level, if you happen to find a lump on your breast that seems to have some substance behind it and feels thicker than normal skin tissue, you should definitely see a professional.

There are some other outlier early detection signs that a lot of people generally don't consider as well. For instance, if you notice there is a red rash forming around the outside of your nipple, this can be an early sign of breast cancer. If your skin begins to take on a rougher texture or your nipple begins to look distorted and strange, these are other signs that you should probably get checked out.

For the most part, you will be able to feel that something is not quite right with your body. In most cases, you will feel a considerable amount of pain in your breast and your armpit that won't leave you alone. If there is a growth, you will sometimes notice swelling in the neighboring areas of your body like your armpit or your collarbone.

The importance of early detection of breast cancer cannot be stressed enough. The survival rate for those who detect that they have localized breast cancer — has not spread elsewhere — early is close to 100%. Those are pretty great odds! So make sure you are taking the necessary steps to get the help you need.

Where to get help

If you have found any of these symptoms you should seek attention right away. For those of us in Boston, Dana Farber Cancer Institute can help you to get the care that you deserve. Make sure to make an appointment with a specialist at 877-442-3324 so that you can leave breast cancer in the dust.

3 S'mores in a Crock

Seaport Hotel executive pastry chef Karen Hodsdson will once again serve up her fan-favorite S'mores in a Crock dessert, made with graham crackers, chocolate chips, mini marshmallows and vanilla ice cream. "This will be my 6th year serving my signature s'mores dessert for Chefs in Shorts," Hodsdson says. "I have had numerous people each year come back for seconds and thirds – last year a man ate five of them!"

4 Grilled Peaches

Robert Differ, pastry chef at the Mandarin Oriental and Bar Boulud, has a southern-inspired dish ready for Chefs in Shorts. Make sure to try the grilled peaches this weekend, made with a brown sugar glaze and a citron crème fraîche pound cake. "It should make for a nice bite, and an early taste of summer," Differ says.

5 Hawaiian Barbecue Chicken Wings

If you're a fan of chicken wings, try Seaport Hotel executive chef Richard Rayment's Hawaiian twist on the dish, featuring caramelized pineapple and toasted sweetbread.

MATT AUL

Hawaiian Barbecue Chicken Wings Recipe

Ingredients

- 3 pounds chicken wings
- 1 cup unsweetened pineapple juice
- ½ cup soy sauce
- ½ cup light brown sugar
- ½ cup coconut milk
- 2-inch piece ginger, smashed
- 4 garlic cloves, smashed
- ¼ cup ketchup
- ¼ cup sriracha
- 1 tablespoon onion powder
- 1 pineapple, rind cut off and sliced
- ¼ cup brown sugar
- canola oil
- black pepper to taste

Directions

- Place everything in a pot except the chicken wings
- Bring to a boil, cook for about 10 minutes making sure the sugar has dissolved, cool down. When marinade is cold, pour over the chicken wings. Keep ½ cup aside to baste wings when grilling.
- Leave to marinade for 4 to 6 hours.
- Heat grill, place wings on grill, cook, turning every now and then and keep basting while cooking. Make sure wings are cooked about 30 minutes.

Carmelized pineapple directions

- Toss pineapple with the brown sugar. Let sit for 20 minutes.
- Oil the grill. Place pineapple on grill, cook for 2-3 minutes on each side. Flavor with ground black pepper.
- Garnish with shredded coconut, thin slices of green onion and Hawaiian sweet sauces.

Taylor Sheridan on why 'Yellowstone' is a risky and 'scary proposition'

The new Paramount Network drama is a very modern western.

GREGORY WAKEMAN
Gregory.Wakeman@metro.us

"Yellowstone" premieres tonight on the Paramount Network at 9 p.m. PARAMOUNT

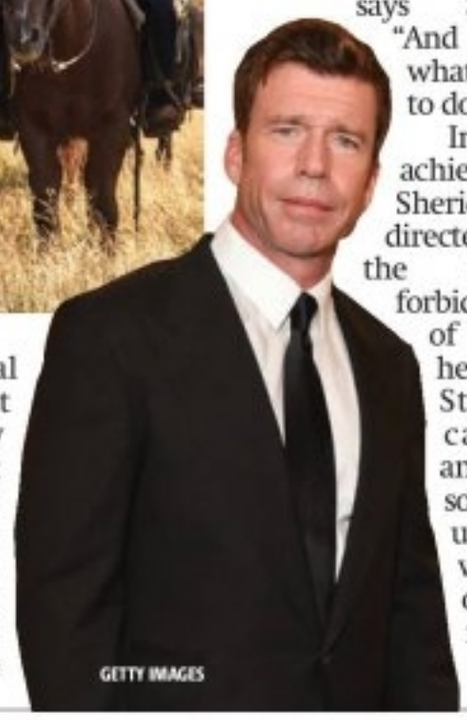
Taylor Sheridan always knew that "Yellowstone" was going to be a risky and expensive venture for whichever studio took it on.

That was one of the main reasons why he started work on the western family drama, which revolves around the Duttons, led by John Dutton (Kevin Costner), as they battle to control the borders of their huge ranch from land developers, an Indian reservation and American's first National Park. In order to give "Yellowstone" the scope and allure that the story and show demanded, Sheridan told Metro that he sought a lot of money.

"Look, it is an expensive show," Sheridan says. "It was a risk. Because there hadn't been a modern Western on television. And it was a scary proposition, and it took a long time to find a home for it."

But good things come to those who wait because, ultimately, Sheridan found the perfect home for "Yellowstone."

"Paramount really responded to the material," says Sheridan. "They were as excited about diving into this hole as I was and were willing to invest the substantial amount of money that it takes to film it properly and to make it look like we all wanted it to look."



GETTY IMAGES

Sheridan was so intent on spending this money on "Yellowstone" because he wanted to make it look like "a movie."

"My pitch was, 'Imagine if John Ford came back to life and wanted to make a TV series. What would that look like?'" says Sheridan. "And that's what we tried to do."

In order to achieve that, Sheridan, who directed all of the episodes, forbid the use of handheld and Steadicam cameras, and instead sought out updated versions of 1940s movie equipment.

"If you watch some of John Ford's films, they were really innovative at the time, and there was a real energy in the camera and an excitement to it that you don't traditionally think of with sticks and dollies," Sheridan says. "But that's how every movie was made before Steadicam and people were able to hold cameras on their shoulders. Employing that method leant itself to capturing the show in a way that was very, very cinematic."

Since "everybody now has the ability to have a cinematic experience at home," Sheridan was excited to make an epic television show that didn't use "visual effects" to create "some fantasy world," but instead really "held the mirror up to an authentic part of Americana."

IDMIX

Wireless powerBanks have become a good option for those who need to charge their phone while away from home. IDMIX offers one of the fastest charging speeds on the market for both Apple and Android devices, plus a completely wireless experience: the device does not need to be connected to a power source to work.

RAVPower

This gadget is considered one of the fastest and best wireless chargers on the market. The RAVPower's HyperAir chargers deliver 7.5W for Apple phones and 10W for Samsung ones.

PowerDock

This device is bigger than the average size of wireless chargers. In addition power smartphones, it offers wired charging of other kinds of devices such as video game consoles, phones, tablets and even laptops. It can charge up to 5 devices simultaneously and can also intelligently detect the charging currents required.

5 Must-have summer pool floats

This summer, whether you are planning to never leave the pool or opt for a location with a pool in the background, it's common practice for the sun and swimming to go hand-in-hand. Within the past few years, peachy flamingo, giant swan, and multi-colored unicorn inflatable floats have become the biggest accessory among swimming pool enthusiasts. This summer, expect the same only with a giant twist—pool floaties that are well, anything but normal—they're extra.

1 Jelly Fish Float
Don't get stung by missing out on all the summer fun. How perfect is this jellyfish inspired floaty? Yes, tentacles and all! ASOS.com, $40

2 T-Rex Yard Sprinkler
This isn't your average 6-foot tall inflatable T-Rex—it's also a sprinkler. Yes, you can be any age to enjoy this water spurting dyno. DicksSportingGoods.com, $60

3 Sebastian the Crab Float
Admit it. You've never stopped wishing that you were part of Ariel's ("The Little Mermaid") world. Well, thanks to Oh My Disney, you can commiserate with their Little Mermaid inspired pool floats. ShopDisney.com, $60

4 Banana Float
Thankfully, it's a no to the banana hammock and a yes to this giant banana float. SUNNYLIFE.com, $60

5 Party Float
You've heard of a party bus? Well, this purple-ish inflatable peacock is what summer experts call a "party-bird island." It's so grand it can hold up to 13,200-lbs. SamsClub.com, $150 KATELYN CHEF

SPORTS

BRADY VS. BELICHICK

We've gotten to the stage in our Patriots analysis in Boston where we debate whether or not Tom Brady did or did not deliver a pregnant pause when asked by Oprah Winfrey whether or not there's "something going on" with him and Bill Belichick?

There was a pause by Brady for sure. But I'm not so sure it was pregnant.

"Um, no. I mean I love him," Brady told Oprah of Belichick. "I love that he's an incredible coach, mentor for me. And he's pushed me in a lot of ways. Like everything, we don't agree on absolutely everything. But that's relationships."

If this tension between Brady and Belichick continues into the season (and there's plenty of reason to think it will), it's not too hard to envision Brady screaming at Belichick much like he did to Josh McDaniels this past season. Remember, Brady and McDaniels are actual friends. Brady and Bill? Not so much.

KYRIE KISSED BY A ROSE?

BET.com and MTOnews reported this week that an incognito Kyrie Irving jumped in the back of Amber Rose's Rolls Royce in Los Angeles, immediately creating speculation that the two are dating.

The Celtics star penned heartfelt message to his former girlfriend on Instagram recently, so the timing made sense that he could be looking for new love.

Rose, who attained fame by dating Kanye West, and creating her notorious "SlutWalk," shot down the rumors on Tuesday, however, posting the following on Instagram (via BET.com): "Please stop associating me with men that I don't even know. It's really f*ing annoying. Looking for love and dating is the last thing on my mind right now. I'm still recovering from my previous relationship. Please let me do so in peace."

Rose is a Philadelphia girl, so she probably wants no part of going green with Kyrie anyway.

KAWHI RUMORS PERSIST

Another interesting nugget to drop in the past few days is that Dwyane Wade told Yahoo Sports' Jordan Schultz that he thinks Kawhi will end up in Boston with the Celtics. Wade is very much tied into the inner workings of the NBA, like his best bud LeBron, so his word is just as valued as any beat reporter around the league at this point.

"That was really surprising that (Dwyane Wade) said that," Schultz told Dan Patrick. "Wade's thought-process was, like ours is, that something is really wrong in San Antonio. It's so toxic and severed there between the front office and Kawhi Leonard that it might really be at the point of no return."

It certainly seems now more than ever that Kawhi will be traded this summer. At the front of the line will be Danny Ainge and the Sixers' fill-in-the-blank GM. Many have questioned whether or not Brett Brown would be capable of making a blockbuster trade. But he's no dummy, and giving up assets for a player of Kawhi's caliber is not exactly rocket science.

McHENRY V. SPAIN

Former ESPN reporter Britt McHenry and current ESPN reporter Sarah Spain got into a vicious Twitter battle this week, which began when McHenry took exception to a female Sports Illustrated writer encouraging fellow females to apply for a vacant job at SI.

"Never once did my parents say apply or try out 'because you're a girl,'" McHenry tweeted. "They told me to apply because I'm a hard worker. At ESPN, I never wanted to write for ESPNW. I wanted to be on the same page as the men. True equality. Novel concept."

Spain, who does write for ESPNW, quickly shot back at McHenry.

"The fact that you never took the time to understand and follow @ESPNW and that you view the coverage of female athletes and female perspectives on major issues in sport as something 'less than' is a sad reflection of how you see women and yourself."

Ouch.

The Twitter feud ended with (OK, it probably still hasn't ended as you read this) McHenry criticizing Spain for once offering to be a fan's date to the Super Bowl on EBay, and with Spain making fun of McHenry for getting laid off from ESPN.

Good times!

Senegal shocks Poland in wild Group H

Senegal continues to provide surprises in its second-ever World Cup.

Senegal is no stranger to surprises at the World Cup. In its only other appearance in 2002, the debutants made a miracle run to the quarterfinals with notable wins over France and Sweden.

It kept the shocks in Group H going on Tuesday afternoon, taking down world No. 8 Poland 2-1 at Spartak Stadium in Moscow.

The appearances by both clubs broke considerable World Cup droughts. While Senegal broke a 16-year drought on soccer's largest stage, Poland is back for the first time since 2006.

Senegal is no stranger to surprises at the World Cup. In its only other appearance in 2002, the debutants made a miracle run to the quarterfinals with notable wins over France and Sweden.

It kept the shocks in Group H going on Tuesday afternoon, taking down world No. 8 Poland 2-1 at Spartak Stadium in Moscow.

The appearances by both clubs broke considerable World Cup droughts. While Senegal broke a 16-year drought on soccer's largest stage, Poland is back for the first time since 2006.

It was a self-inflicted wound that put Poland behind as a shot from Idrissa Gana was deflected by defender Thiago Cionek where goalkeeper Wojciech Szczesny, who was following the natural path of the ball, could only watch in horror as the redirected ball trickled into the back of the net to put Senegal up 37 minutes in.

Poland pushed for an equalizer in the second half, but disaster struck in the 60th minute when a long ball played into the Polish half was immediately descended upon by Mbaye Niang, who was allowed to enter the pitch as the ball crossed midfield after he was helped off to receive treatment to an injury.

An onrushing Szczesny, almost 30 yards from his goal, could not beat the Senegalese man to the ball as Niang blew past an unsuspecting Jan Bednarek, took a touch around the keeper, and simply passed the ball into the goal uncontested.

Poland's protest fell upon deaf ears as the official Nawaf Shukralla clearly indicated that Niang could re-enter the field of play, though the timing was questionable, to say the least.

The eighth-ranked team in the world finally broke through in the 86th minute when Grzegorz Krychowiak headed home a ball from a free kick over the top, ensuring that the last moments of the match were plenty nervy for Senegal.

But Poland could not find the equalizer as a late corner yielded nothing for the white and reds, ensuring it would lose a World Cup opener for a third-consecutive time. It has not won its first game at the competition since 1974.

The three points for Senegal has officially flipped Group H on its head. Along with Japan, the two minnows of the foursome now sit atop the standings after their first matchday.

Aries Focus on getting ahead. If you attend a networking event or set up a meeting with a former co-worker, you'll be offered an interesting lead.

Taurus Face-to-face communication will help you decipher someone's interest and reaction to what you have to say. Look for an opportunity to close a deal or take on something new.

Gemini A change you are trying to make will be interrupted by someone or something you forgot to take care of. Backtrack quickly so you don't fall behind.

Cancer If you make a change to the way you do things, you will be praised for your insight and achievements. Express your feelings to gain support.

Leo Spin things in your favor to outmaneuver someone trying to best you. A practical approach to life will help you recognize someone who's a bad influence and walk away.

Virgo If you feel uncertain about someone, bring your feelings to his or her attention. Clearing the air will help you cultivate a better relationship and gain greater stability.

Libra Put your best foot forward and strive to live a healthier lifestyle. The changes you make will encourage better relationships with the people you care about most.

Scorpio Don't overreact if you want to get things done. Hone your skills and let your creativity take the reins. What you accomplish will be superior to anything you've done thus far.

Sagittarius Take pride in what you do. Learn from the past and be more responsible with your personal finances. Don't let anyone talk you into spending money on something you don't need.

Capricorn Take your time. If someone puts pressure on you, walk away. Do whatever feels right and supports a secure future. Taking a risk is a foolish option.

Aquarius Get the inside scoop before you sign up for something you know little about. Don't let temptation entice you to do something you wouldn't normally do. Take care of your health.

Pisces Get involved in something you've wanted to do for a long time. A creative idea will lead to an interesting opportunity that offers monetary benefits. A partnership looks promising. EUGENIA LAST
